

AUTHORS

Roman Abramov is Associate Professor of Sociology at the National Research University–Higher School of Economics (Moscow, Russia) and Research Fellow at the Federal Center of Theoretical and Applied Sociology of the Russian Academy of Sciences. He specializes in the sociology of professions, memory studies, and urban studies. He is an invited researcher at the Kennan Institute (USA), the School of Advanced Studies in the Social Sciences (EHESS, France), and Central European University (Hungary).

Michael Furman received his PhD in Slavic languages and cultures from Ohio State University in 2016. He is currently a Mellon Fellow and a Visiting Assistant Professor in the Department of German and Russian Studies at the College of Wooster. His current research examines how female Russian speakers use mat to create alternative femininities. He has published work examining how speakers use language to create and manage interactional identities in the collection, edited by Nadine Thielemann and Peter Kosta, Approaches to Slavic Interaction (John Benjamins Publishing Company, 2013) and in the journal Language & Communication.

Ekaterina Moiseeva defended her PhD dissertation in sociology in 2013. In 2011–2012 she was a Fulbright Visiting Scholar at Boston University. Since August 2012 Moiseeva has been a researcher at the Institute for the Rule of Law at the European University in St. Petersburg. Her current projects are devoted to the study of the legal profession and legal services market in Russia. One of her most recent publications is the book, coauthored with Timur Bocharov, Being a Lawyer in Russia: A Sociological Study of a Profession (European University in St. Petersburg Press, 2016; in Russian).

Aleksandra Simonova is a PhD student in the Department of Anthropology at the University of California, Berkeley. In 2015 she received MA in sociology from the European University at St. Petersburg, where she conducted research on the Moscow hackerspace as a member of the Center for Science and Technology Studies. Her undergraduate degree, which she received from Moscow State University, was in political science. She also has experience in urban studies through the Strelka Institute for Media, Architecture, and Design in Moscow, where she had a 10-month non-degree fellowship in 2013. In 2016 and 2017 she received the Wadsworth International Fellowship from the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research. Her current research lies in the fields of political anthropology, nationalism, urban studies, and post-Soviet memory politics.